UWO's First Art Therapists Graduate

Canada's first art therapists have come to the University of Western Ontario. In the University's art therapy program, students are trained to help people express themselves through art. The program focuses on the therapeutic use of art to enhance emotional and social well-being.

During conversation, and Alix S. Mohn's, Christopher Ellis, and the others will be hooded on stage. They are all graduates of the University of Western Ontario's Art Therapy Program. The program was established in 1985 and has since graduated over 80 students.

Nice feeling: The expression of joy and satisfaction that comes from creating art. The students are proud of their achievements and grateful for the opportunity to study and practice their craft.

Education is key to the development of art therapists. The program at the University of Western Ontario prepares students to work in a variety of settings, including hospitals, clinics, and community centers.
